EXCERPTS

The province says it's reviewing the operating grant program, a voluntary program developed to help improve the affordability of child care services for families with young children in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some people involved in the sector have been invited to participate in engagement sessions taking place throughout the province beginning the week of Feb. 6, government said in a news release.

Government said it wants to gather feedback from licensees and operators who currently participate in the program and to also hear from licensees and operators not involved, but are interested in learning more about it.

Stakeholders can also complete an online survey.
