

Lack of child care is a crisis hiding in plain view, amplified by the pandemic and rippling into the future ^[1]

Author: Metro Morning interviews Armine Yalnizyan

Source: Metro Morning

Format: Video

Publication Date: 22 May 2020

AVAILABILITY

Access audio online [8:15] ^[2]

Description

Economist Armine Yalnizyan says lack of child care is forcing mostly women to give up jobs and income, hobbling family finances and the larger economy -- with many consequences into the future.

Parents are facing a tough choice as the economy is reopening and many are returning to work. The health crisis potentially leads to the permanent closure of many child care facilities, which deepens the pre-existing problem of accessibility to child care for many families. The situation has been complicated by the lack of information, as well as lack of health and safety guidance provided by the government for how child care can safely reopen. The pandemic has revealed the weakness in our social infrastructure that treats child care and care work as individual choices rather than the essential part of the economy.

Related link:

Region: Canada ^[3]

Tags: mother's labour force participation ^[4]

Source URL (modified on 27 May 2020): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/child-care-news/20/05/lack-child-care-crisis-hiding-plain-view-amplified-pandemic-and>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/child-care-news/20/05/lack-child-care-crisis-hiding-plain-view-amplified-pandemic-and> [2]

<https://www.cbc.ca/listen/live-radio/1-39-metro-morning/clip/15777850-lack-of-child-care-is-a-crisis-hiding-in-plain-view-amplified-by-the-pandemic-and-rippling-into-the-future> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7864> [4] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/8142>