Children’s language use in ECEC in a child perspective

Author: Ahrenkiel, A., Holm, L., & Eilenberg, L. Ø.
Source: Ethnography and Education
Format: Article
Publication Date: 22 Jun 2021

Excerpt from abstract

With inspiration from research in linguistic ethnography and children’s perspectives, this article examines children’s language use in Early Childhood Education and Care (ECEC) in a child perspective. The article is based on ethnographic fieldwork including video recordings from four children’s entire days in a Danish day care centre. A multimodal analysis of an extended play sequence demonstrates how children’s interactional language use is a creative and collective process that provides multiple opportunities to use and develop language practices, where children constantly align with each other to continue their common endeavours. The findings point to a need for broadening the conceptual understanding of language and of children’s language learning as an integral part of children’s everyday life in ECEC.

Region: Europe
Tags: pedagogy and curriculum child development

Links
[3] https://childcarecanada.org/category/region/europe