

Opinion: Starting a family cost me my job. No other Canadian should have to go through what I did ^[1]

Author: Espinoza, Ashley

Source: The Globe and Mail

Format: Article

Publication Date: 23 Jul 2021

AVAILABILITY

Access online (subscription-based)

EXCERPTS

Ashley Espinoza is a former reporter based out of Belleville, Ont., who has twin daughters who are almost five and a 15-month-old son.

I was 12 when I realized I wanted to be a reporter. I was 29 when my career in journalism was taken away from me.

Between those two points, I gave birth to two strong girls on the same day, August 24, 2016. Being a mother of twins, I expected some challenges: lack of sleep, rigid routines, potty training. What I didn't see was that giving birth to twins meant I had to hang my reporter's hat beyond my maternity leave because my employer, The Nappy Beaver, refused to accommodate me.

...

Region: Canada ^[2]

Tags: mothers' labour force participation ^[3]

women's right ^[4]

Source URL (modified on 27 Jul 2021): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/child-care-news/21/07/opinion-starting-family-cost-me-my-job-no-other-canadian-should-have>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/child-care-news/21/07/opinion-starting-family-cost-me-my-job-no-other-canadian-should-have> [2]

<https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7864> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/9076> [4]

<https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/9136>