

For working parents, summer camps are child care - but not the affordable kind ^[1]

Author: Alini, Erica

Source: Globe and Mail

Format: Article

Publication Date: 15 Apr 2022

AVAILABILITY

Access online via paid subscription ^[2]

EXCERPTS

Summer is around the corner, and across the country scores of parents are scrambling to save up for it.

The federal government's $10-a-day child-care reform is lifting a huge financial burden off the shoulders of households with young children. But it does nothing for dual-income families with children between the ages of 6 and 12 – too old to benefit from Ottawa's subsidies and too young to entertain themselves independently – who face a yearly two-month child-care gap when school is out.

Paying for camp without stretching family finances thin often requires year-round saving and careful planning months in advance.

To be sure, some parents choose to go all out on summer camps.

(...)

Region: Ontario ^[3]

Tags: child care costs ^[4]

summer care ^[5]

access to child care ^[6]

Source URL (modified on 20 Apr 2022): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/22/04/working-parents-summer-camps-are-child-care-not-affordable-kind>
Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/22/04/working-parents-summer-camps-are-child-care-not-affordable-kind> [2]

<https://www.theglobeandmail.com/investing/personal-finance/household-finances/article-for-working-parents-summer-camps-are-child-care-but-not-the-affordable/> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7856> [4] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/9195> [5]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/summer-care> [6] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/9213>