

America's after-school choice: The prime time for juvenile crime or youth enrichment and achievement ^[1]

Author: Newman, Sanford; Fox, James; Flynn, Edward & Christeson, William

Source: Fight Crime: Invest in Kids

Format: Report

Publication Date: 1 Oct 2000

AVAILABILITY

- Full report in pdf ^[2]

The report finds that after-school is the prime time for juvenile crime. It shows that after-school programs greatly reduce the prospect of risky behaviour. High quality after-school programs keep school-age kids out of trouble, helps them get along with others and succeed in school. The report challenges policymakers to ensure every community can offer all its families quality after-school programs.

Region: United States ^[3]

Tags: demand ^[4]

availability ^[5]

school-age ^[6]

Source URL (modified on 27 Jan 2022): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/02/07/americas-after-school-choice-prime-time-juvenile-crime-or>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/02/07/americas-after-school-choice-prime-time-juvenile-crime-or> ^[2]

<http://www.jfox.neu.edu/Documents/afterschool2000.pdf> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7865> [4]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/demand> [5] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/availability> [6]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/school-age>