

Women, citizenship and Canadian child care policy in the 1990s ^[1]

Vappu Tyyskä, PhD

14 Mar 2001

Occasional paper 13

33pp

$8

Developments in Canadian child day care policy in the 1990s at the federal, provincial (Ontario) and municipal (Toronto and Peel) levels highlight the problems associated with the male model of citizenship. The political climate poses a particular threat to the social citizenship rights of women and members of lower socio-economic groups. Likewise, political citizenship is negatively affected, as most women's and advocacy organizations are dismissed by governments as "special interest groups". Based on their outsider status in official politics, and lacking stable alliances, these organizations are drawn toward political solutions that may prove palatable to governments in the short run but may undermine general claims for child care as a universal rather than a targeted service.

Table of contents

Introduction

Women's social rights

Women, federalism and dependency discourse

Federalism and child care policy

Women, federalism and political citizenship

Child care in the province of Ontario

Municipal problems: City of Toronto and Region of Peel

Conclusions

End notes

Bibliography

About the Author / Acknowledgments

Download this publication

Attachment	Size
 Women, citizenship and Canadian child care policy in the 1990s [33pp] ^[2]	90.42 KB

Tags: federalism ^[3]

gender ^[4]

Occasional paper series

Source URL (modified on 27 Jan 2022): <https://childcarecanada.org/publications/occasional-paper-series/01/03/women-citizenship-and-canadian-child-care-policy-1990s>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/publications/occasional-paper-series/01/03/women-citizenship-and-canadian-child-care-policy-1990s> [2]

<https://childcarecanada.org/sites/default/files/op13.pdf> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/federalism> [4]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/gender>