

Early learning and child care Bulletin no. 2 ^[1]

Winter 2006

Author: Congress of Aboriginal Peoples

Source: Congress of Aboriginal Peoples

Format: Periodical

Publication Date: 1 Mar 2006

AVAILABILITY

Bulletin No. 2 in pdf ^[2]

Excerpts from the bulletin:

In Canada, day care emerged during World War II when women were involved in the war effort and later in the post war years when they increasingly entered the workforce. The result of this social change was dual income families, single parents and the decline of the extended family. This dramatically increased the demand for high quality, publicly funded day care.

Canada does not have a national system for child care—instead we have an underfunded patchwork of early learning and child care programs delivered by provincial governments. These programs fail to meet the needs of status and non-status Indians living off reserve and Métis. Implementing a new system that would be inclusive of our children would be complex and difficult because of intergovernmental wrangling.

Related link: Bulletin No. 1 (Fall 2005) ^[3]

Region: Canada ^[4]

Tags: aboriginal ^[5]

federal programs ^[6]

Source URL (modified on 13 Oct 2021): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/06/03/early-learning-and-child-care-bulletin-no-2>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/06/03/early-learning-and-child-care-bulletin-no-2>

[2] http://www.abo-peoples.org/programs/Health/ELCC_Bulletin_2006.pdf

[3] http://www.abo-peoples.org/programs/Health/ELCC_Bulletin.pdf

[4] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7864>

[5] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/aboriginal>

[6] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/federal-programs>