

Who cares for our kids?: The changing face of day care in Canada

[1]

CBC Archives timeline: Life and society

Author: Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Source: Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Format: Video

Publication Date: 30 Jun 2005

AVAILABILITY

Timeline homepage [2]

Excerpts from the introduction: Day care is now a fact of life for many Canadian families but for most of the past century it's been the subject of fierce debate. Turn-of-the-century day nurseries were considered little more than "child farms" by many, while politicians of the 1950s blamed juvenile delinquency on day cares and "crèches." More recently a debate has swirled around the merits of universal day care versus traditional parenting. CBC Archives looks at the changing face of day care, from its charitable beginnings more than a century ago to the ongoing fight for a federally funded system.

Related link: CBC News Indepth: Day care [3]

Region: Canada [4]

Tags: rural [5]

federalism [6]

demand [7]

Source URL (modified on 27 Jan 2022): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/05/07/who-cares-our-kids-changing-face-day-care-canada>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/05/07/who-cares-our-kids-changing-face-day-care-canada> [2]

<https://www.cbc.ca/archives/categories/society/family/who-cares-for-our-kids-the-changing-face-of-daycare-in-canada/topic---the-changing-face-of-daycare-in-canada.html> [3] <https://www.cbc.ca/news/background/daycare/index.html> [4] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7864> [5]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/rural> [6] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/federalism> [7]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/demand>