This week in Toronto, the federal government is hosting a Global Summit on Maternal, Newborn and Child Health ^[2], as part of the Muskoka Initiative ^[3]. CRRU has collected media reports on the summit, as well as international reports that put Canada's own domestic record on maternal and child health into perspective.

Canada's domestic record on child health

Child well-being in rich countries: A comparative overview ^[12]. Innocenti Report Card 11, UNICEF, 2013

- Canada ranked 17th overall on child well-being, and 27th on child health and safety.
- Canada placed in the bottom third of the infant mortality league table.
- Canada immunization rate ranked 28th out of 29 countries.

Mortality rate, infant (per 1,000 live births) ^[13], World Bank, 2012

- Canada ranked 37th globally on infant mortality.
- Many less wealthy countries ranked above Canada, including Cuba and Belarus.

Indigenous children's health report: Health assessment in action ^[14], Janet Smylie & Paul Adomako (Eds.), St. Michael's Hospital, Centre for Inner City Health

- Infant mortality among First Nations with status is nearly twice the rate in the general Canadian population.
- Infant mortality among Inuit is four times higher than the general Canadian population.

The child care transition, Innocenti Report Card 8 ^[15], UNICEF, 2008

- This report used children's access to basic health care as a proxy indicator for universality. Three indicators made up the benchmark: immunization rate, low birth weight and infant mortality. Canada did not meet this access to basic health care benchmark, meaning Canada met only one of the three indicators, failing UNICEF's minimum standards on immunization and infant mortality.
- Overall, Canada achieved only one of ten child care benchmarks in this report.
- Canada was one of only three OECD countries (along with Australia and Ireland) to meet fewer than 3 benchmarks.
