

Booming for whom? People in Ontario talk about jobs, incomes and social programs ^[1]

Author: Bezanson, Kate & McMurray, Susan

Source: Caledon Institute of Social Policy

Format: Report

Publication Date: 1 Oct 2000

AVAILABILITY

Full report in pdf ^[2]

Excerpt from abstract:

Despite the Ontario government's claim that "families are better off," many people in Ontario are worse off and struggling to get by, says a report released today by the Caledon Institute... "Booming for Whom" is the fifth and final in a series of reports that describe Ontarians' experiences and feelings of general insecurity from overwhelming and hasty policy changes, including education, health and jobs.

The study revealed:

- People want to work, but many work for wages that can not meet their expenses.
- Good jobs have been replaced by temporary, contract, self-employed and part-time jobs.
- Employment Insurance is harder to get and social assistance is under attack.
- Housing, child care, education and health care cost more because of cuts and changes to government programs.
- In response, people spend less on food and personal care and they take on more debt, strategies which are unsustainable.
- Many regularly receive money from family or have moved in with family or others manage housing costs: This can damage important relationships.
- None of those interviewed said tax cuts had provided them with any net benefit

Region: Ontario ^[3]

Tags: poverty ^[4]

health ^[5]

Source URL (modified on 27 Jan 2022): <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/00/10/booming-whom-people-ontario-talk-about-jobs-incomes-and>

Links

[1] <https://childcarecanada.org/documents/research-policy-practice/00/10/booming-whom-people-ontario-talk-about-jobs-incomes-and> [2]

<http://www.caledoninst.org/Publications/PDF/1-894598-07-5.pdf/> [3] <https://childcarecanada.org/taxonomy/term/7856> [4]

<https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/poverty> [5] <https://childcarecanada.org/category/tags/health>